ABSTRACT

This document features output from a computerized bibliographic database. The list categorizes entries into three parts. Part I, Population Education, consists of titles that address various aspects of population education arranged by country in the first section and general materials in the second. Part II, Knowledge Base Information, consists of titles that discuss the different multidisciplinary aspects of population education. These entries are grouped into sections of the following major multidisciplinary topics: (1) documentation; (2) environment and environmental education; (3) fertility and family planning; (4) reproductive health; (5) adolescent reproductive and sexual health; (6) HIV/AIDS; (7) information and communication; (8) migration and urbanization and human settlement; (9) population and sustainable development; (10) demography; and (11) gender equality, equity, and empowerment of women. Part III, Audio-visual and International Electrotechnical Commission (IEC) materials, consists of titles of various kinds of audio-visual and IEC aids (films, slides, charts, kits, videotapes, etc.) that focus on both knowledge base and population education aspects. INTRODUCTION

This issue of the Population Education Accessions List is an output from our computerized bibliographic data base using the Micro CDS/ISIS system. The Accessions List is being generated three times a year in three formats: printed format, diskette format, and via e-mail. In addition, it can be viewed on our web site: http://www.unescobkk.org/infores/rechpec/index.htm

The list categorizes the entries into three parts:

Part I - Population Education consists of titles dealing with various aspects of population education arranged by country in the first section and general materials in the second section.

Part II - Knowledge Base Information consists of titles that deal with the different multidisciplinary aspects of population education. These entries are grouped into sections of the following major multidisciplinary topics:

1. Documentation
2. Environment and environmental education
3. Fertility and family planning
4. Reproductive health
5. Adolescent reproductive and sexual health
6. HIV/AIDS
7. Information and communication
8. Migration, urbanization and human settlement
9. Population and sustainable development
10. Demography
11. Gender equality, equity and empowerment of women

Part III - Audio-visual and IEC materials consist of titles of various kinds of audio-visual and IEC aids (films, slides, charts, kits, videotapes, etc.) dealing with both knowledge base and population education aspects.

Part IV - Appendices consist of List of Publishers and Sources, Subject Index, Author Index, and Geographical Index.

Each entry or title is given a running number and bibliographical references that include: (i) either the author or corporate author; (ii) title; (iii) imprint; (iv) collation; (v) subject key words; (vi) country key words; and (vii) classification number. In addition to these, a source code is also given. The source code is an abbreviation of the name of the organization where a particular title can be acquired. For the complete names and addresses of the source codes, kindly consult the List of Publishers and Sources given in the Appendices.

SNDT Women's University.
Instruments for qualitative evaluation of population education in schools. Mumbai, India, Population Education Resource Centre, SNDT Women's University, 1998. 110 p.
Sponsored by UNESCO, Paris.

The present document is organized into five chapters. Chapter I traces the development of conceptualization of population education and the need for reconceptualization in the light of the recent international conferences and congresses including International Congress on Population Education held at Istanbul in 1993 and International Conference on Population and Development (ICPD) held at Cairo in 1994. In Chapter II, objectives of population education (including reproductive health and HIV/AIDS) have been formulated in behavioral terms on the main themes of ICPD. It also deals with the quantitative and qualitative indicators of success of population education programme. Chapter III and V provide the theoretical basis of monitoring and evaluation, including evaluation designs and different techniques of data analysis. Chapter IV gives sample instruments for qualitative evaluation of cognitive and affective abilities at the primary, secondary and teacher training levels.

Handbook for educating on adolescent reproductive and sexual health, Book One: Understanding the adolescents and their reproductive and sexual health: guide to better educational strategies. Bangkok, UNESCO PROAP, 1998. 38 p.

This handbook is a result of information repackaging programme of the Regional Clearing House on Population Education and Communication. This first volume focuses on the demographic profile of the adolescents, as well as their fertility, sexual behaviour, incidence of STDs, HIV/AIDS, teen pregnancy and abortion, and the like. It also analyses the factors and problems associated with adolescent reproductive and sexual health as well as the causes of the unhealthy development of adolescents. Recommendations are provided by the author to address the various issues and concerns on adolescent reproductive health, which includes education among others.

This handbook is a result of information repackaging programme of the Regional Clearing House on Population Education and Communication. This volume two provides the actual strategies, techniques and guidelines for integrating contents on adolescent reproductive and sexual health into the curriculum. It provides as a backgrounder a comprehensive analysis of the gaps and problems in introducing reproductive and sexuality issues into the curriculum, the response of the countries and the need for carrying out a more systematic programme on it. More importantly, it provides a definition of what a reproductive and sexual health education covers, the various strategies that can be used to introduce an educational programme on it and lastly, the elements that can be considered in formulating the curriculum on the subject.

Directory of projects on the prevention of prostitution in Asia and the Pacific. New York, United Nations, 1991. 54 p. (ST/ESCAP/1074)

This directory is based on the information collected through the survey on projects and schemes on prevention of prostitution which was conducted during May - July 1991. It provides profiles of 41 projects/schemes on the survey results. Of 41 projects cited in survey responses, 23 had been carried out in Thailand. This figure may be taken as indicative of considerable interest in and efforts devoted to addressing the issue of prostitution prevention in Thailand. It gives information on title of the project, name of the organization, address, collaborating bodies, objectives of the project, target groups, methods used, materials produced, evaluation of the project, starting and ending date of the project, funding sources and budget.

Annual Meeting of the Project on Male Participation in Family Planning Through Innovative IEC Approaches, Kanchanaburi, Thailand, 24-25 November 1997.
Report of the Annual Meeting of the Project on Male Participation in Family Planning Through Innovative IEC Approaches (THA/95/P04), held at the Felix River Kwai Hotel, Kanchanaburi Province, Thailand, 24-25 November 1997. Bangkok, Department of Health, Ministry of Public Health, 1997. 143 p.
Organized by the Bureau of Health Promotion, Department of Health, Ministry of Public Health, Thailand and supported by United Nations Population Fund (UNFPA).

This report consists of two main sections: Report Section and Lecture Section. The Report Section covers the implementing results of the Project on Male Participation in Family Planning Through Innovative IEC Approaches (1997) in six provinces (Lampang, Surat Thani, Nakorn Srithammarat, Trang, Pattalung, and Krabi). In Lecture Section, there are two lectures: 1) Socio-cultural, and psycho-graphic characteristics of Thai people in the five southern provinces of Thailand by Dr. Sonthaya Anakkasiri; and 2) Experiences and recommendation of implementation of IEC programme on reproductive health for adolescents in northern part of Thailand by Assistant Professor Chongchit Tiamtong.

This book presents an overview of operations research used in family planning programmes in a collection of articles published in the past 35 years, with examples from the developing countries of Asia, Africa, and Latin America. The selections cover wide range of subjects illustrating the major issues and topics that have benefited from operations research, as well as a variety of research designs used in OR. The five sections of the book deal with programme impact, access to family planning, resources, quality of care, and the conduct of OR studies.

Husbands' involvement in abortion in Vietnam. Studies in Family Planning 29(4): 400-413, December 1998.

This study analyzes involvement of men in abortion in Viet Nam, where induced abortion is legal and abortion rates are among the highest in the world. Twenty men were interviewed in 1996 about the role they played in their wives' abortions and about their feelings and ethical views concerning the procedure. The results showed that both husbands and wives considered the husband to be the main decisionmaker regarding family size, which included the decision to have an abortion, but that, infact, some women had undergone an abortion without consulting their husbands in advance. Parents and in-laws were usually not consulted; the couples thought they might object to the decision on moral grounds. Respondents' ethical perspectives an abortion are discussed. When faced with an unwanted pregnancy, the husbands adopted an ethics of care and responsibility toward family and children, although some felt that abortion was immoral. The study highlights the importance of understanding husbands' perspectives on their responsibility and rights in reproductive decisionmaking and their ethical and other concerns related to abortion.

Population policy, son preference and the use of IUDs in North Vietnam. Reproductive Health Matters 16(11): 66-76, May 1998.

This paper discusses contraceptive use and discontinuation among women in north Viet Nam, in the context of a strong cultural preference for sons and a stringent two-child population policy. Among a random sample of 1432 married women aged 15-49 in north Viet Nam in 1994, nearly 60 per cent used the intrauterine device (IUD) for contraception; other modern methods were hardly used at all. Overall discontinuation rates were high - nearly 45 per cent after three years; the most common reason was expulsion. Women without sons reported significantly higher rates of IUD discontinuation due to expulsion or contraceptive failure than women who had a son. This is an indication that women without sons had deliberately removed the IUD and reported this as an expulsion or contraceptive failure, in hopes of satisfying their families' wish for a son, while avoiding the criticism of deliberately exceeding the two-child limit. Assessment of medical technology usually consider only clinical and service aspects. A gender analysis of contraceptive effectiveness data that also takes into account the social, cultural and political context, can offer insights into the complexities of women's reproductive lives and the contradictory demands on their fertility.

Induced abortion in Latin America: strategies for future social research. Reproductive Health Matters 6(11): 55-65, May 1998.

This paper analyzes the present state of knowledge on induced abortion in Latin America based on a critical review of information from regional meetings and seminars in the 1990s and articles in international journals in the field. It focuses on the incidence of abortion, the abortion decision-making process, and the political and public dimensions of induced abortion, and discusses theoretical and methodological aspects of abortion research, and ethical and political concerns. It calls for the consolidation of the data obtained to date; the introduction of new theoretical frameworks and approaches from other disciplines; the reduction of inequalities in the available knowledge between countries in the region through national and comparative research; and deeper analysis of the political dimensions of induced abortion, particularly matters of legislation, public debate and health programme development.

Preventing unsafe abortion in Western Kenya: an innovative approach through private physicians. Reproductive Health Matters 16(11): 77-83, May 1998.

This paper describes the first year's experiences of a project launched in Western Kenya to form a network of private physicians and train them to provide comprehensive, affordable post-abortion care and family planning. Links between this network and primary health care workers and local women's groups are currently being made and will further enhance the potential for reducing the incidence of both unwanted pregnancies and dangerous abortions. Setting up and expanding such networks is an important practical and innovative approach to realising the goals of safe motherhood.

The contraceptive potential of lactation for Bangladeshi women. Asia-Pacific Population Journal 13(4): 3-32, December 1998.

Longitudinal data from two surveillance sites, one urban and one rural are used to explore the contraceptive potential of lactational amenorrhoea in Bangladesh. Full breastfeeding is shown to afford significantly greater contraceptive protection than partial breastfeeding, though partial breastfeeders are also found to enjoy good protection against pregnancy while amenorrhoeic. The results also suggest that lactational amenorrhoea can afford good protection against pregnancy beyond six months postpartum. Also, older women seem to have significantly lower risks of conception during postpartum amenorrhoea than younger women. This article suggests that active steps should be taken to incorporate lactational amenorrhoea into postpartum family planning strategies in Bangladesh and identifies a number of barriers, both client and service-related, that currently inhibit this development.

Looking locally at China's one-child policy. Studies in Family Planning 29 (4): 373-387, December 1998.

Of all the reforms and policies set in motion in the early 1980s in China, the one-child policy has been called the most far-reaching in its implications for China's population and economic development. Almost two decades later, little is known about what the policy looks like across local neighborhoods and villages. To sketch a more general picture of the one-child policy, this article presents panel data from three waves of the China Health and Nutrition Survey (1989, 1991, and 1993) collected in 167 communities in eight provinces. Local policy, including policy strength and policy incentives and disincentives, is detailed separately for urban and rural areas. These data confirm that no single one-child policy exists; policy varied considerably from place to place and within individual communities during the 1989-93 period.

The potential impact of introducing pregnancy testing into menstrual regulation services in Vietnam. International Family Planning Perspectives 24(4): 165-169, December 1998.

Pregnancy testing is not routinely conducted before early abortion procedures in Viet Nam. Thus, a substantial proportion of women may be undergoing unnecessary procedures. In this study, researchers provided pregnancy testing to 923 consecutive women seeking menstrual regulation at a government clinic in rural Thai Binh Province, Viet Nam, to determine the proportion of unnecessary procedures being performed. They also estimated the costs and savings of using pregnancy testing before menstrual regulation.

ESEAOR Regional Workshop on Reproductive Health, Kuala Lumpur, Malaysia, 29 April - 6 May 1998.
[Report]. Kuala Lumpur, IPPF ESEAOR, 1998. 28, [62] p.

This is the report on the proceedings of the Regional Workshop on Reproductive Health, held from 29 April to 6 May 1998, in Kuala Lumpur, Malaysia. The Workshop was attended by representatives of member family planning associations in East & South East Asia. The Workshop is divided into two modules: a) Three days of skills training on the logical framework to develop proposals for donors funding; b) Four days on exploring the concept of sexual and reproductive health with the aim of identifying activities that can be implemented by the FPAs and the Regional Office. Many of the critical issues raised in the discussions in the Workshop and the recommendations put forward by the participants, together with the group outputs have been included in this report.

Reducing maternal mortality and morbidity. New York, United Nations Population Fund, 1998. 16 p. (Programme advisory note; no. 5)

UNFPA programmes of assistance are based on the agreed-upon goals and objectives of the ICPD Programme of Action for the next 20 years. Reduction of maternal mortality is, therefore, one of the indicators by which the success of reproductive health programmes will be judged. This Note is intended as a source of practical information based on evaluation and research activities, to guide the implementation of activities to reduce maternal mortality and morbidity in the context of reproductive health programmes. The Note consists of four parts. Part I. Background. Part II. UNFPA and the safe motherhood initiative. Part III. Safe motherhood in the context of reproductive health: causes of maternal deaths; factors underlying medical causes of maternal mortality; solutions; actions for health planners and managers; actions for UNFPA in building health-sector capacity. Part IV. Conclusion.

Reproductive health education and training: a manual for trainers. New Delhi, Parivar Seva Sanstha, 1998. 257 p.

This manual has been written as a resource for persons wishing to prepare school teachers and staff of non-government organization (NGOs) to disseminate information on reproductive health education to the school children or adults in the community. Most sessions focus on developing and conducting sessions on reproductive health education for the high school and higher secondary levels, they can also be adapted for children and adults in almost all age groups. The manual provides practical guide specific to the planning, delivery and evaluation of RHE training programmes. All the five modules on family dynamics, communication & counselling, adolescence, basic preventive health, reproductive and child health have been organized in various sessions that can also be used in isolation. The contents of each session is organized around steps in conducting the session. It also includes Facilator's handouts and Participant's handouts wherever applicable.

The challenge of addressing gender in reproductive health programmes: examples from Indonesia. Reproductive Health Matters 6(11): 33 -44, May 1998.

Starting from the assumption that gender equity and womens's empowerment are necessary to achieving women's reproductive health and using examples from Indonesia, this paper focuses on the ways in which reproductive health programmes view gender inequality. It questions the capacity of existing intervention paradigms to counter gender disparities and promote women's emancipation. It discusses the problems of a women-centred approach, of focusing on men in order to support women, and of reifying the family to the detriment of its individual members. Finally, it suggests that new, alternative approaches for interventions should be sought which transcend individual actors and uphold a focus on relationships.

Using situation analysis to assess women's perceptions of quality of maternal-child health and family planning services. Reproductive Health Matters 6(11): 45-54, May 1998.

Situation analysis is one method of measuring the quality of health services and was developed to assess the readiness of family planning service delivery sites to provide quality contraceptive services. Although situation analysis has also been used to describe the quality of contraceptive services delivered, the information it has been able to provide to date is more limited. Using mainly the example of three studies of maternal-child health and family planning services in Botswana, Tanzania, and Kenya, this paper describes how the methodology is used and its strengths and limitations for assessing quality of non-contraceptive reproductive health services. These include the costs women have to pay, privacy, provision of information to women and other inter-personal interactions, provider performance and training, and women's satisfaction with services. While situation analysis could benefit from several improvements, its primary role should continue to be highlighting broad areas of deficiency in quality of service provision, to which other, more specific instruments can be applied to gain in-depth information.

Client perspectives on quality of reproductive health services in Viet Nam. Asia-Pacific Population Journal 13(4): 33-54, December 1998.

This study finds that, although Viet Nam's family planning programme is increasingly successful, improvements are needed in the quality of reproductive health services if current progress is to continue. For example, service delivery outlets do not always provide a sufficiently wide choice of methods. Deficiencies exist regarding the distribution of methods and there is a lack of information on how to use particular methods effectively. Also counselling on contraceptive use for abortion clients is virtually absent. The article concludes with a set of in-depth recommendations for overcoming these shortcomings.

This paper explores the dynamics of the second decade of life for Indian girls and reviews some of the policy and programmatic initiatives intended to serve adolescent girls in India. The paper is divided into four main sections. First is a discussion of the concept of adolescence in India and of the kinds of familial and social constraints that girls in the second decade of life face. This section is followed by a review of some of the demographic literature on the events and circumstances that help to distinguish the second decade of life from what goes before and after for both girls and boys. The paper then provides some suggestions for how to address the needs of girls. The paper concludes with a discussion of the themes that characterize their work and offers a few suggestions of future directions in research and advocacy on adolescent girls in India.

Education in human sexuality: a sourcebook for educators. Bombay, India, Family Planning Association of India, 1998. 270 p.

This sourcebook is for educators, parents, guardians, teachers, counsellors, field workers, social workers, doctors, and others to whom young people turn for advice and guidance on matters concerning their sexual development. The book covers various aspects of human sexuality, including basic reproductive physiology, physical and emotional changes that occur with growing up, changing family roles, healthy and responsible man-woman relationships, and the importance of dignity and mutual respect. The educator will find in this book material suitable for use with various age groups, ranging from very young children to young adults. The content and methodology of a programme of education in human sexuality could be adapted, based on the age and cultural background of the group or of the individual.

This paper focuses on Vietnamese youth reproductive health needs. It is divided into five sections. The first section introduces the paper and discusses the paper's methodology and conceptual framework. The conceptual framework emphasizes the need to consider and understand the socio-economic changes currently underway when examining the pertinent issues and needs for youth reproductive health. The second section defines youth in the Vietnamese context and describes trends in youth's behaviour and their diverse characteristics. Section three addresses the reproductive health needs and risks for today's Vietnamese youth, including what is known about their knowledge and behaviour. Section four diagrams existing research and programmes designed to address questions of youth reproductive health and section five presents points of discussion for policy formulation, further research and programme design.

Commission on Population.
Prototype core messages for advocacy of the Philippine Population Management Program. Metro Manila, Commission on Population, 1998. 1 package.
Supported by United Nations Population Fund.

This is a set of prototype messages, each on a different population-related issue, for use as a unifying national guide applicable to and adaptable in local advocacy work in different parts of the country. Following are formulations of possible prototype messages on ten issues identified by POPCOM national and regional officials as needing advocacy. These issues are: 1) Education; 2) Health; 3) Food and agriculture; 4) Youth; 5) Women; 6) Sustainable development; 7) Environment; 8) Migration and urbanization; 9) Labour and employment; and 10) Poverty.

Report of the High-level Meeting to Review the Implementation of the Programme of Action of the International Conference on Population and Development and the Bali Declaration on Population and Sustainable Development and to Make Recommendations for Future Action, Bangkok, 24-27 March 1998.

The present publication contains the report of the Meeting and the key future actions, as well as the background papers, which provide a detailed profile of the region's population and development situation. It describes the critical issues and constraints facing countries of Asia and the Pacific as they endeavour to reorientate their population and development programmes to reflect the paradigm shift that has occurred since the adoption of the Programme of Action at Cairo in 1994.

This issue of Asia-Pacific Population & Policy highlights findings from recent East-West Center study on demographic and social changes among young people in Asia. The project, supported by the U.S. Agency for International Development through The Population Council, covered 17 countries in East, Southeast, and South Asia. It brought together information on the changing numbers of young people aged 15-24 and on trends in marriage, school enrollment, and workforce participation among youth population in the region.

Education and population dynamics: mobilizing minds for a sustainable future. Paris, UNESCO, 1999. 55 p. (EPD-99/CONF)

This monograph explores the multiple interactions between education and population. It is a contribution to the ICPD+5 review process, aimed at assessing the extent to which the challenges indentified in Cairo are now being met. It consists of eight sections: Section 1. Education - a force for shaping the future; Section 2. World population situation; Section 3. The demographic challenge to education; Section 4. The impact of education on population - a complex, multifaceted and evolving relationship; Section 5. A closer look at half of humanity - the nine high-population developing countries; Section 6. Targeting population and health objectives through education; Section 7. Education and population in the quest for development; Section 8. Conclusions.

Annual review of population law, 1994-1995: international resolutions and agreements, constitutional provisions, legislation regulations, judicial decisions, legal pronouncements. New York, UNFPA, 1998. 960 p.
Editor In-Chief: Reed Boland.
This review is also available at URL: http://www.law.harvard.edu/Programs/annual_review/.

This is the twelfth and thirteenth years of joint publication of the Annual Review of Population Law by UNFPA and the Harvard Law School Library. The editors have instituted a number of changes to make the book reflect more closely the concerns identified by the Programme of Action adopted at the 1994 ICPD and the concerns identified by readers as important for their work. Sections on housing literacy programmes, land tenure and agrarian reform, census, and vital registration have been eliminated and the section on drought, famine, and desertification redefined in broader terms emphasis has been placed on human rights, women's human rights, and reproductive health. It contains an editor's preface describing current highlights and trends in law, a main body with short texts and summaries, and Appendix composed of longer texts. Entries are listed in Table of Contents first by subject and then by country or organization. In the text they are listed within jurisdiction by date, with all legislation preceeding judicial decisions. The main subject areas on population law listed are general population policy, family planning, marriage, family, children, women, the aged, migration, health care, education.

Southeast Asian populations in crisis: challenges to the implementation of the ICPD Programme of Action. New York, UNFPA, 1998. 148 p.

This report examines the efforts of the first sixteen months of the financial and economic crisis in Indonesia, Malaysia, the Philippines and Thailand on the implementation of selective aspects of the ICPD Programme of Action. The report provides a comparative perspective on the findings of the study. The next chapter analyses the origins and development of the financial and economic crisis in Indonesia, Malaysia, the Philippines and Thailand. Chapter 3, 4 and 5 analyse respectively the effects of the crisis on governance and civil society, population and development, and women and reproductive health. The penultimate chapter considers the various resource issues arising from the crisis and the final chapter draws together the overall conclusions and policy and programme recommendations. The four appendices provide detailed country case studies that provided the basis of the analysis in the report.

National population policies. New York, United Nations, 1998. 444 p. (ST/ESA./SER.A/171)

The present publication is part of the effort of the Population Division to disseminate the information resulting from its monitoring activities. It provides a summary overview of population policies and dynamics for each of the Member States and Non-Member States for which data are available at mid decade for the 1970s, 1980s and 1990s. This publication consists of two chapters. Chapter I. offers a global perspective on the evolution of selected aspects of population policies between 1976 and 1996 with respect to each of the major demographic variables, based on the country profiles and the information contained in the annex tables. Chapter II. shows a country-by-country basis, the evolution of Government views and policies from 1976 to 1996 with respects to population growth, fertility and family planning, health and mortality, international migration, and spatial distribution, within the context of demographic and social and economic change.

Suicide in countries and areas of the ESCAP region. Asia-Pacific Population Journal 13(4): 55-74, December 1998.

In the ESCAP region each year more than half a million people die by suicide and over 5 million attempt to kill themselves. This article collates available evidence about the incidence, age and sex patterns of suicide mortality in selected countries and areas of the region. It discusses cultural and legal attitudes towards suicide, as well as the social and health implications of the problem. It concludes by outlining some of the attempts that could be made at prevention both by governments and civil society.

Human rights and legal status of women in the Asian and Pacific region. New York, United Nations, 1997. 68 p. (Studies on women in development; no. 1) (ST/ESCAP/1730)

This publication is a regional study prepared under the ESCAP project "Promotion of Women's Rights as Human Rights". This study will encourage policy makers, researchers, non-governmental organizations and all members of civil society to promote women's rights as human rights and work together in eliminating all forms of discrimination against women. It is divided into four sections. Section I. Introduction. Section II. The reception of the general normative standards on gender equality in international law in national constitutions and international monitoring. Section III. Limitation of constitutional approaches and the relevance of substantive and domestic laws. IV. The special problem of women and violence.

This issue of the Women's Studies Quarterly provides a definitive guide to the UN Fourth World Conference on Women (Beijing 1995) and the parallel NGO Forum on Women. It assembles 25 essays, reports, documents, and speeches by governmental and non-governmental leaders; fist-hand reportage of the proceedings; a special section of photographs; and, the full text of the Platform for Action and accompanying commentary. It provides readers with insights into the planning preceding the meetings and the excitement of actually taking part in this unprecedented event. Since the elements of the Platform overlap significantly with those of national women's studies curricula, the volume appropriately concludes with 12 national reports on women's studies: China, Germany, Ghana, Hungary, Latvia, Korea, The Netherlands, Norway, Peru, South Africa, Turkey, and Uganda. This issue is essential for anyone working to carry out the mission of the Platform and the women activists and teachers around the world.

Women (a) internet: creating new cultures in cyberspace. London, Zed Books, 1999. 240 p.

The book analyzes the emerging cultural characteristics of women's activities on the Internet across the globe. The first half of the book reflects on the type of cyberculture women are creating including the borders, exclusions and silences they encounter. Part two presents women forging new frontiers, working with the new communication and information technologies in their local and global settings. Throughout, the emphasize is on the dynamism of culture and of communication; the contributors demonstrate how the Internet can be used to empower women to negotiate the global and make it a local space and, conversely, to inform and change global cultures.

Violence and its consequences for reproductive health: the Vietnam case. Ha Noi, Viet Nam, Population Council, 1998. 59 p. (South & East Asia regional working papers; no. 12)

This paper begins with a brief overview of the issues involved including concepts, definitions and types of violence against women. Research from many countries highlights the health consequences for women and girls, and establishes the link between violence and reproductive health. In the second part, the paper reviews the evidence available in Viet Nam based on published and unpublished secondary data including academic articles, research studies, statistics from the Wupreme Court and articles from Vietnamese newspapers. In addition, to better elucidate some of the issues relating to domestic violence, sexual abuse, including child sexual abuse and forced sex in marriage, primary data were collected through in-depth interviews and focus group discussions with policemen, OB/GYN doctors, researchers, and married women and men. Finally, some recommendations for future research and interventions are presented which address the problem of violence against women in Vietnamese society.

Draft report of the seminar. Bangkok, Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific, 1998. 1 v. (various pagings).

The Seminar was convened as a major component of a project on "Strengthening Policy Analysis and Research on Female Migration, Employment, Family Formation and Poverty in Cambodia, Lao PDR, Myanmar and Viet Nam". A study prepared under the auspices of the project, title A Demographic Perspective on Women in Development in Cambodia, Lao PDR, Myanmar and Viet Nam, was presented for discussion at the Seminar. Papers on gender dimensions of population and development in Indonesia, Malaysia, the Philippines, Singapore and Thailand, prepared by resource persons and government representatives, are also presented. This Seminar brings together government policy makers, researchers, representatives of NGOs and representatives of international organizations to assess the current role of women in development, to review policies and programmes, and to consider future action toward improving the situation of women.

Gender and health: technical paper. Geneva, WHO, 1998. 76 p. (WHO/FRH/WHD/98.16)

The aim of this technical paper is to explore some of the implications of the shift from the women in development (WID) to the gender and development (GAD) approach for the analysis of health and health care issues in general and for the work of WHO in particular. The shift from an exclusive focus on women to a focus on gender, that is, the socially constructed differences and the power relations between women and men, as a determinant of health. It is envisioned that this publication is the first in a series that makes health-related programmes gender-sensitive along with the need to build up the knowledge base on the gender differentials of health problems and health care and on effective interventions.

World contraceptive use 1998 [Chart] / Department of Economic and Social Affairs, Population Division. New York, United Nations, 1999. 1 chart; 61 x 76 cm. (ST/ESA/SER.A/175)

This wallchart presents information available on the contraceptive practices of married women of reproductive age in 142 countries and areas, covering 92 per cent of the world's population. Featuring a table that compiles individual country data on contraceptive use, as well as global and regional averages, it highlights the percentage of women using contraception, the types of methods used and trends in use. In addition, through a series of pie charts, the wallchart depicts in a vivid manner the percentage of women using the various contraceptive methods, for both more developed and less developed regions and the world as a whole.
